wenty-five years, has gathered and held such audiences as no other Englishman ever addressed for such a length of time or in such unvarying numbers.

The remark is often made that two brothers might reside for half a century in London without ever meeting. My experience in encountering nequaintances and friends is so different that I do not believe the old saying. I always find the man I want to see in London without looking for him. He is sure to turn up on some thoroughfare, in some museum, gallery, church, him. He is sure to turn up on some thoroughfare, in some museum, gallery, church, or hall. I was not at all surprised to find a whole family of friends from Petersburg, Va., in the end of the gallery which I entered in the Metropolitan Tabernaele, nor a few minutes after when I saw Dr. Alexander, of our seminary, come in at the same door. During the service the whole pew to the left of me was filled by some of my fellow-passengers on the Arizons. I suppose I might have found fifty acquaintances in the audience that morning. As we came away from the church Dr. Alexander told me of the meeting of the Pan Presbyterian Comell at Belfast, and, among other thines, of an excellent brother from the South there, who complained that I had not answered his letters. I told Dr. Alexander that I had left a hundred unanswered letters on my studytable in Richmond; that my negligence in this

The post-office is not opened at all in this great commercial city on the sabbath. There was something absolutely restful in the order and quiet which reigned on every side after the rush and rear of the week. I applied for tickets of admission to the House of Lords to the Earl of shaftesbury. He had already gone to the country, but my note was forwarded to him, and he premally answered it, saying that if I would show his letter to the messenger of the House at the door he would procure admission for us.

Through the kindness of Mr. Beresford

House at the door he would procure admission for us.

Through the kindness of Mr. Beresford Hope I obtained tickets to the House of Commons, where we heard a spirited destate between Sir Stafford Northcote and Mr. Gladstone on the endless subject of the Egyptian policy of the Government. It was very racy, and I regret my want of time and space, for I would like to give you a pen-picture of the gallant old Premier, in his light gray suit, looking fresher and more game than when I heard him four years ago, with the Earl of Benconsfield sitting opposite to him, watching every word and movement, both of them wonderful illustrations of physical and intellectual vigor in old age. Disraeli has been taken from the areus on which he and intellectual vigor in old age. Disracii has been taken from the arena on which he won so many victories: Mr. Glastone still remains by all odds the first statesman of England and of the world, unless, indeed, Bismarck should dispute the preeminence with him. So much interested were we in the debate in the House of Coamons that when we repaired to the House of Lords, wishing to see and hear something in that chamber also, to our disappointment we found all shut up and silent, the adjournment having taken place more than an ment baying taken place more than an hour, as a policeman told us.

I would also give you my impressions of what I have seen of the Salvation Army, as this is the only letter I expect to write for the Central, but I have no more time for

is. It shall be the duty of the judges of the county and hustings courts of each county, city, and town of this Common-wealth, as soon as possible after the passage she have not been so forithate as others in being pose-sed of all the comforts of life, though not less worthy, would not hesitate, when disease or accident hefelithem, to be conveyed to an institution of this kind for proper treatment and making. Yery often some of our worthy mechanics and others meet with accidents, &c., and their circumstances are such that they are not able to procure the proper medical assistance; they should certainly be provided for at this hospital, where they would receive every confort and attention.

Now, what is the present condition of affairs? These worthy citizens have no internative except the poor-house. The idea of an aimshouse is a gloomy and meiarchildy one to men of this character. Under such circumstances if is demoralizing, and centralizing, and cannot but prove acutely morthlying to their sonse of pride, and certainly reflects son credit upon their city. Thus it will be seen that such a hospital would be promotive of much good, and a blessing to many who are without the comforts of a home with sick. Every city in the Union with a population as large as Richmond bas a hospital for the purposes unificated, not only for the benefit of their citizens, but also for strangers who may require medical aid away from their homes and friends. If the city is not in a condition at present to make an adequate appropriation for the erection of a public hoppital measurement of the large amounts to be expended soon on other public improvements, it is to be hopped, however, that she will, before many vars, be able to erect such an institution as will reflect credit upon her people.

If the proposition as suggested should meet with a favorable consideration, the fitting up of a public hoppital measurement of a public hoppital measurement of a public hoppital measurement of the barge and only the proposition as understance in this direction, the city very little. The expenses of the aim of the control meet with a horozale consideration, the fitting up of a public hospital would cost the city very little. The expenses of the almahouse hospital department would doubtlesbe reduced, and with a few other charities concentrated in this direction, the city would be materially alded, and the additional amount from the city to consummate
the object in view would be comparatively trivial when the great good that would emante from such a worthy and human enterprase is taken into consideration.

After these remarks by Dr. Riddell, on motion of Mr. Pizzini the resolution was referred to the Committees on Finance,
Health, and Relief of the Poor.

Mr. Newton Beers list night closed a two-nights' engagement at the Richmond Theatre in the play, "Only a Woman's Heart," Mr. Beers took the character of "Old Roger," the tramp. To the Editor of the Dispatch: I see by the proceedings of the Common Council held yesterday evening (September 1st, that Dr. R. G. Cabell, president of the Board of Health, says in a letter: "A ride through the city will convince the members of your honorable bodies that the city is in as good sanitary condition as the limited means at present under the control of the Board will accomplish."

That last clause is a saying one, but I

the Board will accomplish."

That last clause is a saving one, but I suggest that when the members of the Council take that ride, they ride after night along Laurel street, south of Cary, when, though they may not be able to see anything amiss, they will certainly be made aware that the atmosphere in that locality is not pleasant, whether it be scholesome or not. I notice, also, that a report in favor of reënacting an old ordinance allowing the Board of Health to grant permits to keep hogs in Marshall, Jefferson, and Jackson Wards was adopted. Does that mean that hogs may be kept in other wards without a special ordinance? There are hogs in Clay Ward, and if I am not mistaken, hog-pens.
